

INTRODUCING HOW TO SURF A HURRICANE

One man's fight for the future ignites a hurricane of change.

Moro Petroff's revolutionary battery project, vital for a sustainable future, is abruptly shut down by his uncle. Refusing to give up, Moro risks everything on a daring heist during a massive storm. From corporate sabotage to hurricane surfing and unexpected alliances, his desperate gamble could either save the world or destroy everything he knows.

Determined to get his prototypes back, he enlists the help of a professional hurricane surfer, an Alaskan oil worker, and a French salt farmer. But he's no criminal mastermind, and they soon find themselves caught between a growing hurricane and a surprise algae field.

Will Moro succeed? Will they beat the hurricane surfing world record? And how exactly does one farm salt?

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Todd Medema wrote How to Surf a Hurricane because he believes the future doesn't have to be a dystopia, and he got tired of only reading stories of doom and gloom. Todd studied Technology, Entrepreneurship, and Design at Carnegie Mellon. After working on self-driving cars and board games, he discovered a passion for clean energy. He spent four years working on the Tesla Megapack battery and now offers Product Management consulting to clean energy companies. Todd spends his free time playing video games, climbing rocks, and gleefully riding his electric bike everywhere. He is currently working a new novel in the Hurricane universe.
